CHILD IN PADDLE-BOX CALLED FOR "MAMMA"

Little One Was Lying Alive on Pile of Dead When Rescuers Extricated Bodies Tangled Among the Blades of Huge Wheel.

One of the rescuing fleet put in under the off shore paddle box of the Slocum and discovered several dead bodies of women and children lying on the blades of the paddle wheels.
In removing one of the bodies several other corpses dropped from their positions into the water.
On top of the pile of dead the rescuing party discovered a little girl crying and calling for "Mamma." She with the others had managed to reach the interior of the paddle box as a means of escape. She was the only one of the unfortunate lot that survived, the rest being burned to death.
Out of the peril from fire and water came four-year-old Lizzie Krieger without a smudge on her red gown, without a stain on her placid pretty face. She was taken to the Alexander avenue station, where she sat for two hours in a room in which dead women and children were laid out in three long rows.
Her big brown eyes swept over the crowd, as it surged in and out seeking to identify perhaps the dead. To all inquiries she had but one reply: "My mamma is all burned up. I saw her burn."
An Evening World reporter learned from her that she went to the excursion with her mother and her little brother. Her mother was caught in the flames and some one seized her and the boy. Where he is she does not know. She says that her home is in Fourteenth street, and it is probably in the vicinity of First avenue.

WORLD OPENS BUREAU TO AID SURVIVORS.

The World has opened an information bureau at No. 308 East Sixth street for the purpose of aiding survivors of the Slocum disaster in making known their safety and to help the relatives of the dead and missing to locate the bodies of their loved ones.
Revised lists will be kept at this bureau and all inquiries will be given careful attention. The telephone number is 2275 J Orchard and a reporter has been assigned to answer telephone calls of inquiry.

Bodies of Women and Children Still Coming Ashore at North Brother Island and Other Points Around Hell Gate --- Fire Caused by the Overturning of Pot of Grease in the Galley.

The big excursion steamboat Gen. Slocum burned and sank to-day off North Brother Island with 1,600 excursionists, 500 of them children from St. Mark's German Lutheran Church, in East Sixth Street, aboard. The loss of life is estimated to be 1,000.

The following is the latest estimate made by Detective-Sergeant Kinsler and Police Inspector Brooks. Their computation is as follows:

Number on board.....	1,600
Dead bodies recovered	400
Injured in hospitals	300
Survivors accounted for.....	100
Missing.....	800

Fifty-three injured persons died on North Brother Island while the doctors were attending to them just after they had been carried from the boat to the shore.

When the Slocum went down, at 12:25 o'clock, two hours and twenty-five minutes after the fire was first discovered, it is estimated that there were nearly one hundred charred bodies on her decks. Every few minutes a body pops up from the wreck. The corpses of seven adults and one baby were towed from there to North Brother Island at 2 o'clock.

Just after the Slocum sank where she had drifted from North Brother Island the water was black with bodies. The tug Fidelity succeeded in picking up eighty-eight charred corpses before the swirling eddies in Hunt's Cove off Riker's Island carried them out into the Sound.

None of these eighty-eight bodies can ever be identified. Heads and legs are burned off. Not a shred of clothing is left on any one of them. The captain of the Fidelity says that he estimates that he left twenty bodies without trying to take them into the boat, because it would have been impossible to arrange them into any semblance of human remains.

WORST HARBOR HORROR.

In sudden paralyzing horror the tragedy has no parallel in the history of marine disasters in this harbor. Within half an hour a laughing, care-free crowd, bound for a day's outing in the country, was more than decimated by fire and water.

All the bodies in the Harlem Morgue, on North Brother Island, and at the station-houses, will be removed to the Manhattan Morgue at the foot of East Twenty-sixth street before midnight, and the Morgue will be kept open day and night.

Patrolmen Abel R. Van Tassel and Charles Kelt, who were detailed to the Gen. Slocum for the excursion, report to Commissioner McAdoo that the fire started at 10.10 A. M. in the forecabin, when the boat was opposite One Hundred and Sixteenth street.

Coroner O'Gorman, who with a squad of police, made a detailed search of bodies for marks of identification, reports that about $180,000 worth of jewelry and money, or bank books representing money, was found upon the bodies.

FIRE STARTED IN POT OF GREASE.

According to Rev. Dr. Haas, the fire started in the galley from a pan of boiling fat when the boat was off the sunken meadows, opposite One Hundred and Thirty-fourth street. Instead of running his boat ashore at One Hundred and Thirty-fourth street, Capt. Van Schaick beached her off North Brother Island, a quarter of a mile away, and on this trip the flames
